1 Introduction

The 10th Russian Summer School in Information Retrieval (RuSSIR 2016) was held on August 22–26 in Saratov, Russia[1]. The school was co-organized by Saratov National Research State University[2] and the Russian Information Retrieval Evaluation Seminar (ROMIP)[3].

The RuSSIR school series started in 2007 and has evolved into a renowned academic event with extensive international participation [1, 2, 3]. Previously RuSSIR has taken place in Yekaterinburg, Taganrog, Petrozavodsk, Voronezh, St. Petersburg, Yaroslavl, Kazan, and Nizhny Novgorod. Over the years, many RuSSIR courses have been taught by world-renowned researchers in Information Retrieval (IR) and related areas.

Saratov is located in the European part of Russia. Situated on the Volga river, it is known for its 3-km-long Leuschit bridge connecting Saratov and Engels. Saratov has many cultural and historical sites. The Volga embankment and Kirov avenue are the two main streets for a pleasant walk along the river and for exploring the city.

Saratov State University (SSU) has the status of a National Research University, with long-standing excellent educational programs in Mathematics and Computer Science. The SSU pro-
