Jimmy Carter, the 39th President of the United States, has lived an extraordinary life. He has served as a peanut farmer, a naval officer, a church deacon, a Sunday school teacher, a governor, and a Nobel Peace Prize laureate. But one of his most fascinating and lesser-known pursuits is his work in media.

Carter's involvement in media began in the early 1970s, when he was still a peanut farmer and a little-known political figure. After leaving the White House, Carter continued to work in media. He hosted a weekly radio show called "The Carter Center Hour," which aired on NPR. He also wrote several books, including the best-selling memoir "An Hour Before Daylight." In 1994, he founded the Carter Center at Emory University, which is a non-profit organization that promotes peace and health around the world.
